We are master of the unsaid words, but slaves of those we let slip out.

Each year, hundreds of thousands of high school students will sit for an examination to determine their ability to do well in college, and every year, college entrance boards determine which students will be accepted based on criteria that include the test scores for the SAT and ACT exams. Some states require that every graduating student take at least one of these exams by the end of his or her senior year. In the Midwest, most states require their students to take the ACT. On the East and West Coasts, however, most states ask students to take the SAT. But, honestly, what distinguishes one exam from the other?
